2020 Election

As you know, 2020 is an election year. The election will be held on Tuesday, November 3, 2020. All 435 seats in the United States House of Representatives, 35 of the 100 seats in the United States Senate, and the office of President of the United States will be contested.

We encourage everyone to vote in their primary and general elections. Electing officials that have your best interests at heart is the first step in fighting for industry friendly legislation.

The IREM Civic Action Center can be used to help verify your voter registration status and address, vote early, find your polling place, and learn more about your candidates. The Civic Action Center can be found at <https://actnow.io/m7KdbqZ> or by scanning this QR code with your phone's camera.

Tuesday, March 3rd, is Super Tuesday, the day when the greatest number of states hold primary elections and caucuses. More delegates to the presidential nominating conventions can be won on Super Tuesday than on any other single day of the primary calendar.

The states holding a primary on March 3rd are:

- Alabama
- Arkansas
- California
- Colorado
- Maine
- Massachusetts
- Minnesota
- North Carolina
- Oklahoma
- Tennessee
- Texas
- Utah
- Vermont
- Virginia

It is very possible a front runner for the Democratic presidential nomination will emerge after Super Tuesday.

On Tuesday, March 10th, the following states will be conducting their primary or caucus:

- Idaho
- Michigan
- Mississippi
- Missouri
- North Dakota
- Washington

Members in those states can still try to schedule a meeting with their representative. However, please note that your meeting will most likely be with staff and not the legislator. It would also be to your benefit to check the election results before your meeting to see if the legislator won their primary.

2020 Legislative priorities: Points to lobby

Reauthorization and reform of the National Flood Insurance Program (NFIP)

Congressional action needed

Long-term reauthorization and reform of the NFIP.

Issue background

Currently the NFIP is set to expire after 11:59 PM on September 30th, 2020.

Flood insurance is required for a mortgage in more than 20,000 communities nationwide. While there is a growing private market for flood insurance, millions of small business and homeowners currently depend on the federal program to protect their property against flooding, the most costly and common natural disaster in the United States. Without the NFIP, more property owners could become uninsured and turn to the Federal government for taxpayer-funded disaster relief and rebuilding assistance after major floods.

House Resolution 3167 (H.R 3167) – The NFIP Reauthorization Act

The NFIP Reauthorization Act would extend the program for five years, include significant reforms to mapping and mitigation, and provide private flood insurance options.

Congressional actions to date

On June 12, 2019, by a unanimous vote of 59 to 0, the House Financial Services Committee approved HR 3167. Next, the House of Representatives must vote on the measure. IREM requests the House to take up the NFIP Reauthorization Act at the first opportunity and move the bill to the United States Senate.

What to tell your Representatives and Senators

- Please don't let the NFIP lapse; lapses of flood insurance only exacerbate uncertainty in real estate markets.
- IREM encourages Congress to continue working on a long-term reauthorization package that includes meaningful NFIP reforms to flood mapping and mitigation and removing obstacles to the private flood insurance market.

IREM position

IREM believes a strengthened NFIP combined with a robust private market is needed to maintain access to flood insurance in all markets over the long term so that it remains a viable option for property owners. For this reason, IREM supports the long-term reauthorization of the NFIP together with reforms to ensure its ongoing sustainability for property owners. Such reforms include:

- Development of more robust, cost effective private flood insurance options
- Strengthening federal assistance and resources for property owners to build to higher standards, mitigate the risk of flooding, and keep insurance rates affordable
- Improvements to flood insurance rate map accuracy, including adoption of modern and more granular insurance pricing technologies.

Opposing views

- Some believe the National Flood Insurance Program is pushing out private insurers and underpricing risk.
- Yet, no one believes that either the NFIP or the private market will be able to provide the flood insurance to cover all properties across the U.S.; it is going to take a robust partnership of the two in order to close the insurance gap.

The Secure and Fair Enforcement (SAFE) Banking Act (H.R. 1595, S. 1200)

Congressional action needed

IREM® (Institute of Real Estate Management) supports the passage of H.R. 1595, the Secure and Fair Enforcement (SAFE) Banking Act. The legislation's intent is not to make sweeping changes to cannabis laws but, instead to clarify banks could safely finance and do business with these businesses.

The Act would create a safe harbor for federally insured financial institutions to provide banking services for legitimate cannabis-related businesses (or businesses that tangentially work with them) in states that have legalized cannabis. Passage would allow these businesses access to federally-insured banking institutions.

Further, it would direct the Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (FinCEN) and federal banking regulators to issue guidance and exam procedures for banks working with cannabis businesses.

Issue background

33 states and the District of Columbia have passed legislation authorizing the use of cannabis for either medical or recreational use. The Cannabis industry within those states is estimated to have brought in more than $10 billion in sales and $1 billion in tax revenue.

However, cannabis is still classified as a Schedule I controlled substance under the Controlled Substances Act, meaning FDIC-insured banks cannot accept money from cannabis businesses or they risk running afoul of anti-money laundering laws.

This includes not just cannabis growers and retailers, but also any business that works with them such as trucking companies used for transport and rent paid for storage or retail space.

Congressional actions to date

The SAFE Act was passed by the House 321-103 on September 25th, 2019. On September 26th, the bill was referred to the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

What to tell your Representatives and Senators

- The prohibition has resulted in these businesses being forced to operate on a cash-only basis. This not only creates security concerns for the businesses and the communities they serve, but also makes tracking and regulating the industry much more difficult.
- By creating a safe-harbor for financial institutions in states that have legalized cannabis to work with those businesses, the SAFE Banking Act resolves many of the issues listed above.
- The SAFE Act also creates a venue for businesses tangentially connected to cannabis (especially the real estate sector) to operate.

IREM position

We do not have a position on marijuana legalization. We only ask that businesses operating legally within their state have access to the same financial options that other small business do.

Opposing views

Opposition is mostly from those opposed to cannabis legalization itself, and they believe allowing cannabis-businesses to access banks will help the cannabis industry flourish and lead to federal legalization.

Tricks of the trade

Congressional meeting etiquette

Be prompt, patient, and flexible

When it is time to meet with a member of Congress, be punctual and be patient. Congressional schedules tend to be very fluid. Because of changing schedules, it is not uncommon for members of Congress to be late or to have a meeting interrupted due to the member's busy schedule. If interruptions do occur, be flexible. If possible, ask to continue your meeting with a Member's staff. Remember, staffers influence their thinking on many issues. Establishing a positive relationship with staff can be extremely helpful in future encounters with that Congressperson.

Be prepared

Be familiar with the issues that you are going to discuss. IREM has prepared briefing papers on the issues, talking points, and what the opposition's position is on the issue. Refer to these documents as needed during your meetings. Be prepared to answer questions or provide additional information in the event the member expresses interest or asks questions. If possible, take some time to do more research on the issue so you feel comfortable discussing it during the meeting.

Provide the IREM fact sheets when you meet with your legislator. Hopefully, you have emailed the fact sheets to their office in advance. This will help ensure you meet with the most appropriate staff, and that they are prepared.

Do your research on the Senators and Representatives you will be meeting with beforehand. What committees are they on? Have they already taken a position on your issue? Have they spoken at an IREM or NAR event? Also, get to know about the legislator as a person. Where were they born? Maybe you went to the same school, share a hobby, or are fans of the same team! Be sure to use neutral, bipartisan, and factual resources (beware of "fake news!").

Be political

Members of Congress are sent to Washington to represent the best interests of their district or state and their reelection depends upon how well they do that. During your meeting, phrase the argument in your own words and relate how the issue affects your industry and the interests of the member's constituency. If possible, communicate to the member how you or your group can be of assistance to him/her. Where it is appropriate, remember to ask for a commitment.

Don't be surprised if it appears you are more knowledgeable on the subject than the individual you are meeting with. No legislator or staffer can be expected to know everything! However, it is also okay for you to not know all the answers to the questions you may be asked. Answer questions to the best of your ability, and if you don't know an answer, admit it. Communicate that you will look into the issue and report back. This will also provide you the opportunity for follow-up and to provide any additional information.

Be responsive

Be sure to provide your business card and get their business card before leaving the office. Follow up the meeting with a thank you letter that outlines the different points covered during the meeting, and send along any additional information and materials requested. A sample thank you letter will be available on the IREM website for you to use.

Social media

Social media is also a great way to share your positive experiences with your meeting. Most members of Congress have twitter or Instagram accounts. Post about your meeting and tag them. They will appreciate the exposure.

Top 10 things Hill staffers hate to hear

10. But I thought my appointment was with the Senator.

Never indicate that you are disappointed to be meeting with a staff person. On Capitol Hill, having a good relationship with staff can make or break your cause.

9. Here's some reading material for you – our 300-page annual report.

When meeting with a member of Congress or staff person, try to limit your leave behind materials to one or two pages, and include details on where this information can be located, if appropriate.

8. How much of a campaign contribution did your boss get to vote against (or for) this bill?

Believe it or not, most staff have no idea who contributed to their boss' campaigns. Not only is this question insulting, but even if it were accurate, the staff person isn't likely to know.

7. I assume you know all about H.R. 1234.

With thousands of bills being introduced during each Congress, no staff person will be able to keep them all straight. Always provide information on the bill title, number, and general provisions.

6. No, I don't have an appointment, but I promise I'll only take 30 minutes of your time.

If you weren't able to get an appointment, it's OK to stop by, drop off some materials and let them know of your interest in the issue. It is not OK to camp out in their doorway and demand that someone talk to you.

5. No, I don't really need anything specific.

Educating the legislator or staff on an issue is great, BUT, if you don't ask for something – support/oppose a bill, co-sponsorship, a congressional record statement, a meeting in the district etc. – staff will wonder why you came by. Updates on your issue are fine, so long as they are accompanied by a request.

4. We have 10 (or more) people in our group.

Congressional offices are tiny. If you have more than five people in your group, you'll be standing out in the hallway. Plus, having so many people talking at once can dilute the impact of your message. Try to limit your group to no more than five. If you do have a large group, assign a few people (specifically constituents) the responsibility of delivering the message, and be sure to be upfront with the office in advance about how many people are coming.

3. What you're telling me can't be right. I heard Stephen Colbert on the Late Show say otherwise.

Congressional staff, or members of Congress for that matter, won't lie to you. Sometimes, they may see things differently than you do, but if they say a bill definitely is not going to be considered on the floor, or if there is no such legislation, you should believe them.

2. What do you mean we have to stand in the hall?

See number 4. A request to meet in the hallway is simply an indication of space limitations. Nothing else.

1. No, I don't represent anyone from your district or committee interest. I just thought you'd be interested in what I have to say.

Members are elected to represent their constituents. Period. If you are not their constituent or you are not connected to their constituents, you are not relevant to them. Your time is always best spent working with your own elected officials and turning them into advocates for your cause.

Congressional staff roles

To be an effective communicator, it is helpful to know the titles and principal functions of key staff. In addition to their Washington offices, members of Congress also maintain at least one office in their districts. Senators usually have several offices throughout their home state. Titles are often abbreviated with acronyms, which are provided.

Chief of Staff: The Chief of Staff reports directly to the member of Congress. He/she usually has overall responsibility for evaluating the political outcome of various legislative proposals and constituent requests. This person is in charge of overall office operations, including the assignment of work and the supervision of staff.

Legislative Director (LD): The Legislative Director develops, implements, and advances the legislative agenda while handling policy portfolio. The Legislative Director works closely with the Member, chief of staff, and the legislator's district staff to advance the legislator's priorities.

Legislative Assistant (LA): The Legislative Assistants are the backbone of the Congressional staff. In most offices there are several Legislative Assistants who are responsible for the Member's legislative activity within particular policy areas. An LA usually covers a number of related areas, especially in the House of Representatives where staffs are smaller. For example, depending on the Member's interests and committee assignments, one LA may cover taxes, economic issues, and the federal budget, while another covers defense, international relations, veterans affairs, and trade.

Press Secretary or Communications Director: The Press Secretary's responsibility is to build and maintain open and effective lines of communication between the member, his/her constituency, and the general public. The Press Secretary is expected to be familiar with both print and electronic media and how to most effectively promote the member's views or position on specific issues.

Scheduler or Appointment Secretary: The Scheduler is responsible for allocating a member's time among the many demands that arise from congressional responsibilities, staff requirements, and constituent requests. The Scheduler may also be responsible for making necessary travel arrangements, arranging speaking dates, visits to the district, etc.

Caseworker: Most Congressional offices have one or more Caseworkers assigned to assist their constituents. The Caseworker's responsibilities include helping resolve problems constituents present in relation to federal agencies, e.g., Social Security and Medicare issues, veteran's benefits, passports, etc. Caseworkers usually work in the Member's district offices.

Accessing the Capitol and Hill office buildings

A word on security

Capitol Hill Security is similar to the security found at an airport. All visitors and their belongings are screened before entering the Capitol complex. Should you get stuck in the security line behind a large school group, advise the officer at the door that you have an appointment with a member at a certain time and ask to go ahead of the group. Also look on the map and outline of Capitol Hill (on pages 12-13) for doors on side streets. They are often less busy than those on the main thoroughfares. But make sure they are for visitors – not just staff.

Prohibited items

Visitors will not be permitted to bring the following items into the Capitol complex: oversized suitcases, duffel bags and oversized backpacks, weapons and explosives, aerosol and non-aerosol sprays, cans and bottles (liquids of any kind), knives of any length, razors and box cutters, or mace and pepper spray. Capitol Police are only authorized to make exceptions if a prohibited item is determined to be necessary and required to serve child care, medical or other special needs.

The Capitol

To tour areas of the Capitol beyond the Capitol Visitor Center, you must make a reservation in advance. Note that tour schedules can fill up quickly, so it is advisable to book your tour well in advance. There are several ways to book a tour of the Capitol. U.S. residents can go directly through their Representative or Senators' office. Many

Congressional offices offer their own staff-led tours to constituent groups of up to 15 people, and most can assist you in booking a general tour. Tours can also be arranged directly through the U.S. Capitol Visitor Services using an online reservation system. For more information, or to book a tour online, please visit www.visitthecapitol.gov

In addition to guided tours, the Capitol Visitors Center opened its doors for the public in December 2008. The Visitor Center is a public access building and you do not need a tour ticket to enter. There is much to see, including an exhibition hall where you can learn about Congress and the Capitol, two gift shops, and a 530-seat restaurant. The Capitol Visitor Center is open to the public from 8:30 am until 4:30 pm Monday through Saturday. The Capitol Visitor Center is located underground, below the East Capitol Grounds.

Senate Gallery - The line for entry to the Senate Gallery is at the North side of the Capitol.

House Gallery - The line for entry to the House Gallery is at the South side of the Capitol.

Please note: Visitors may obtain gallery passes from the office of one of their Senators or their Representative. Passes are required to enter the gallery whether or not the body is in session.

Getting around

On the Hill

There are three House office buildings (Cannon, Longworth, and Rayburn) that run along Independence Avenue on the South side of Capitol Hill. The Senate buildings (Russell, Dirksen, and Hart) are on Constitution Avenue on the North side of the Hill.

Please remember security lines can be long. Please arrive in plenty of time to wait in line to get through security.

There is a subway system that links the Capitol with the House and Senate office buildings. Due to security concerns, however, it is no longer accessible to visitors unaccompanied by a Member or staff. In addition, visitors may no longer walk through the Capitol basement to get from one side of the Hill to the other.

Where to eat

There are a few restaurants close to the House & Senate office buildings, but the lines are often very long. Your best bets are probably the House and Senate cafeterias. There are cafeterias in each building, which vary in size, selection, and quality.

Your best bets are:

- On the Senate side: Food is served in the basement of the Russell and Dirksen buildings (The food is generally better in Dirksen).
- On the House side: Food is served in the basement of all three buildings, though the food court in the basement of Longworth offers the best and widest selection.
