

Unlock the benefits of volunteering with IREM – for you and your company!

Being an IREM volunteer can make you a more valuable asset to your company and provide opportunities you can't find anywhere else. Bottom line: it's an easy way for your company to invest in you and your career!

Enhance your industry skills

Develop leadership, project management, and networking skills that can have a direct and positive impact at work. You'll get new and fresh insights into best practices, real estate management trends, and emerging technologies, which can be beneficial to your company as well!

Increased job satisfaction & retention

Volunteering can lead to higher job satisfaction, making you feel more connected to your profession and motivated to perform better at work.

Broaden your network

Through IREM, you'll have access to a large network of like-minded real estate professionals from around the world, which could help you and your company make valuable industry connections and partnerships.

Peer-to-Peer knowledge sharing

Volunteering allows you to collaborate with other professionals who have different perspectives and experiences – helping you learn new tactics and strategies to use in your job.

Increase company visibility in the profession

Volunteering with IREM can boost your professional reputation and have a positive impact on your company. Your employer can benefit by supporting employees, like you, who want to give back to the real estate community – it's a great way to show the company's commitment to the real estate industry and its future success.

Leadership & teamwork experience

Volunteering often requires working with diverse groups of people, giving you experience interacting with people from different backgrounds, experience levels, work styles, and fields in the real estate management industry.

Expanding industry knowledge

Through volunteering, you'll learn about various aspects of real estate management, from finance and ethics to technology and education – this holistic view can help you bring innovative ideas to your job!

Volunteering promotes communication, problem-solving, and leadership abilities, enhancing self-confidence and job performance — skills that are highly valued by employees and employers. In fact, 64% of employees believe volunteering positively impacts their professional growth by offering new challenges.
